THE BCMH LOGO: The BCMH logo is based on the combination of Mars & Clio, the Roman God of War and the Greek Muse of History, as a good summation of what we are about. It depicts Mars with his spear whilst Clio stands before him reading from a book – or perhaps this journal – the Secretary General of the BCMH having pointed out that since Mars cannot read someone will have to read it to him.

ARTICLE SUBMISSION GUIDELINES

Authors should submit their manuscripts, plus 100 word abstract, as an e-mail attachment to the Editors at editor@bcmh.org.uk.

Please provide us with appropriate contact details including your full mailing address.

The editors are happy to consider papers that are under consideration elsewhere on the condition that the author indicates the other journals where the article has been submitted.

Papers submitted to the BJMH must not have been published elsewhere.

The BJMH is a double blind peer-reviewed journal, i.e communication between reviewers and authors is anonymised and managed by the Editorial Team. All papers that the Editors consider appropriate for publication will be submitted to at least two suitably qualified reviewers for comment. Subsequent publication is dependent on receiving satisfactory comments from reviewers. All authors will be sent copies of the comments from the reviewers.

The Editors are keen to encourage article submissions from a variety of scholars and authors regardless of their academic background. For those papers that demonstrate great promise and significant research but are offered by authors who have yet to publish or who need further editorial support, the Editors are willing to offer mentoring and guidance to ensure an article's successful publication.

The Editorial Team is particularly keen to consider articles on subjects that might not ordinarily receive much attention but which clearly show the topic has been properly researched and for which the author does not receive any external financial support.

The Editors will provide authors with additional support on a case-by-case basis. If authors wish to take advantage of this Editorial Support Service then they should provide an outline of their background and explain how they believe the Editors can help when they submit their paper.

The Editorial Team makes every effort to offer this service in a transparent manner and so will publish their reasons for supporting the author at the same time that their article appears in the BJMH.

Articles should be no more than 8000 words in length (including footnotes) and be set out according to the BJMH Style Guide. Authors should note that articles will usually be rejected – unless the author has indicated that they wish to take advantage of our Editorial Support Service – if they do not conform to the Chicago Manual of Style or if they go over the word count.

The editors may suggest changes to articles and book reviews in the interest of clarity and economy of expression; such changes will not be made without consultation with the author. The editors are the final arbiters of usage, grammar, and length.

Authors are encouraged to supply relevant artwork (maps, charts, line drawings, and photographs) with their essays. The author is responsible for obtaining permission to publish any copyrighted material.

Please Note: the Journal has been given permission by the Imperial War Museum to make use of their images free of charge.

The submission of an article, book review, or other communication is taken by the Editors to indicate that the author understands the copyright arrangements of the journal. Specifically, work published by the BJMH retains a Creative Commons copyright license that allows articles to be freely shared, copied and redistributed in any medium or format but must be attributed to the author and cannot be used commercially or remixed or transformed unless the licensor gives permission. More information about this license can be found here:

The British Journal for Military History acting on behalf of the British Commission for Military History do not accept responsibility for statements, either of fact or opinion, made by contributors.

BJMH STYLE GUIDE

The style guide for BJMH is very simple and designed to encourage you to submit your work.

Please use Times New Roman in Font 12 for all your submissions. Footnotes should be in Font 10. In addition, we prefer that you adopt the Chicago Style for your paper. More information about the style can be found here: <http://www.chicagomanualofstyle.org/home.html>.

Use footnotes not endnotes. Quotation marks should come before the full stop, reference numbers after it and spelling should be British rather than American.

Please justify your text. Paragraphs do not require indenting. Line spacing should be single and leave a carriage return between paragraphs.

All quotes should use single quotation marks and wherever possible have a footnote reference. Extended quotes (over three lines) require indenting. Quotes within quotes should use double quotation marks.

With regards to page layout: the top and bottom of the page should be 2.54cm, the left/right margin 3.17 and the header/footer 1.25cm.

Examples of References:

Michael Howard, War in European History (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2001).

BOOK REVIEW SUBMISSION GUIDELINES

The BJMH seeks to publish concise, accessible and well-informed reviews of books relevant to the topics covered by the journal. Reviews are published as a service to the readership of the BJMH and should be of use to a potential reader in deciding whether or not to buy or read the book. The range of books reviewed by the BJMH will reflect the view of the field of military history as set out in the Journal Mission Statement. Books published by academic publishers, general commercial publishers, and specialist military history imprints may all be considered for review in the BJMH. Reviews of other types of publication such as web resources may also be commissioned.

The Editorial Team for the BJMH is responsible for approaching reviewers and commissioning book reviews. From time to time a list of available books for review may be issued, with an open call for potential reviewers to contact the BJMH Editors. The policy of the BJMH is otherwise for reviews to be solicited by the Editors rather than for reviewers to propose reviews themselves. In all cases, once a reviewer has been matched with a book, the Editorial Team will arrange for them to be sent a review copy.

Book reviews should be up to a maximum of 700 words. A review should summarise the main aims and arguments of the work, should evaluate its contributions and value to military history broadly defined, and should identify to which readership(s) the work is most likely to appeal. The journal does not encourage personal comment or attacks in the reviews it publishes, and the Editorial Team reserves the right to ask reviewers for revisions to their reviews. The final decision whether or not to publish a review remains with the Editorial Team. The Editorial Team may seek the views of an author of a book that has been reviewed. Any comment from the author may be published.

All submitted reviews should begin with the bibliographic information of the work under review, including the author(s) or editor(s), the title, the place and year of publication, the publisher, the number of pages, the ISBN for the format of the work that has been reviewed, and the price for this format if available. Prices should be given in the original currency, but if the book has been published in several territories including the UK then the price in pounds sterling should be supplied. The number of illustrations and maps should also be noted if present. An example of the heading of a review is as follows:

Gow, James. The Serbian Project and its Adversaries: a Strategy of War Crimes. London: Hurst, 2003. xii + 322 pp. 1 map. ISBN 978-1850654995 (Paperback). Price £17.50.

The reviewer's name, and an institutional affiliation if relevant, should be appended at the bottom of the review.

Reviews of a single work should not contain footnotes, but if the text refers to any other works then their author, title and year should be apparent in order for readers to be able to identify them. The Editorial Team and Editorial Board may on occasion seek to commission longer Review Articles of a group of works, and these may contain footnotes with the same formatting and standards used for articles in the BJMH.
